After an introduction to Danish pronunciation, grammar and basic vocabulary, we can move on and start working on, for example:

- Everyday situations and conversations at the place of work
- Phone calls
- Email correspondence and writing a letter
- Presentation of your field of work and of the company
- Product presentation (for example, combined with a power point presentation)
- Reading and understanding annual reports, newspapers, etc Watching and discussing the news on Danish television
- Negotiation in Danish

Should the company possess materials in Danish, they can be integrated well in the course. A course book is also used as basis for the regular training.

METHODOLOGY

The classes are taught in accordance with the communicative method. The method is based on the assumption that the acquisition of a second language is more successful when the learning environment simulates the environment of the first language acquisition; i.e., the mother tongue. In practice, this means that clients will be speaking as much Danish as possible from the beginning to build the confidence to express themselves in Danish and actively work with the (spoken) language. This methodology is particularly suitable for groups (2-8 persons) but is also useful in one-on-one teaching.
